Marxists believe that the world is divided into two classes: the bourgeoisie and the proletariat. The bourgeoisie are the owners of the means of production, while the proletariat are the workers who sell their labor for wages. Marxists believe that the bourgeoisie exploit the proletariat, and that this exploitation is the root of all social problems.

Political correctness is a tool that Marxists use to silence dissent and promote their own ideology. By labeling dissenting opinions as "hate speech" or "offensive," Marxists can shut down debate and prevent people from expressing their views.

Political correctness is also used to divide society. By creating a climate of fear and intimidation, Marxists can make it difficult for people to have open and honest conversations about important issues.

The use of political correctness by Marxists is a dangerous trend. It is a form of censorship that seeks to silence dissenting opinions and promote a particular ideology. This is a threat to free speech and open debate, and it must be stopped.

Examples of Marxist Social Engineering

There are many examples of how Marxists have used political correctness to silence dissent and divide society. Here are a few examples:

- In 2017, a group of students at the University of California, Berkeley, protested a speech by conservative commentator Milo Yiannopoulos. The protesters shouted down Yiannopoulos and prevented him from speaking. The university administration later issued a statement condemning Yiannopoulos's speech as "hate speech."
- In 2018, a group of students at Evergreen State College protested the presence of a conservative speaker on campus. The protesters demanded that the speaker be removed from campus and that the college create a "safe space" for students of color. The college administration later issued a statement apologizing for the speaker's presence on campus.

- In 2019, a group of students at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill protested a speech by conservative commentator Charles Murray. The protesters shouted down Murray and prevented him from speaking. The university administration later issued a statement condemning Murray's speech as "hate speech."

These are just a few examples of how Marxists have used political correctness to silence dissent and divide society. This is a dangerous trend that must be stopped.

How to Fight Back Against Marxist Social Engineering

There are a number of things that can be done to fight back against Marxist social engineering. Here are a few tips:

- Be aware of the tactics that Marxists use. Marxists often use political correctness to silence dissent and divide society. Be aware of these tactics and don't let them succeed.
- Don't be afraid to speak out. Don't be afraid to express your dissenting opinions, even if they are unpopular. The more people who speak out against Marxist social engineering, the less power it will have.
- Support free speech. The First Amendment of the United States Constitution protects free speech. Support organizations that defend free speech and fight against censorship.
- Educate others. Educate others about the dangers of Marxist social engineering. The more people who understand the threat, the more likely we are to defeat it.

The fight against Marxist social engineering is a long and difficult one, but it is a fight that we must win. The future of our society depends on it.
